Aviation Law, Air Crash Litigation and General Litigation

Aviation and personal injury law is constantly developing. Therefore, it is important that the attorney have a fundamental understanding of not just the regulations and bodies of law applicable to any given set of facts, but to have a solid background in the particular industry to serve the clients' needs effectively and efficiently. Mr. McCallum not only brings his substantial background in aviation and litigation to the practice, but his consistent activity as a corporate pilot and instructor helps him maintain an edge over other lawyers with no such commitment to aviation and law.

Our practice of Aviation Law and general litigation includes all aspects of the area from product liability, aviation regulatory and tax management issues, aviation transactions such as aircraft pre-purchase, purchase and management agreements, commercial operator representation, aerial applicators, fixed base operators, A&P mechanic representation including liens, Part 145 repair station representation, airframe and part: designers, manufacturers and distributors. Additionally, we routinely handle FAA enforcement actions including Part 91, 135 and 145 airmen defense. Mr. McCallum is the head of the firm's Aviation Law practice and a designated AOPA panel attorney.
